LEARN, DISCOVER, HEAL,
CREATE—AND MAKE THE WORLD EVER BETTER.

Founded in 1850, the University of Rochester is one of the country's top-tier research universities. Rochester has a long tradition of breaking boundaries—always pushing and questioning, learning and unlearning.

The Warner School of Education and Human Development, one of five professional schools at the University, is committed to advancing change to improve education and support positive human development through innovative research, practice, and service. At Warner, you'll tackle enduring challenges in education and the human experience with fresh, nontraditional approaches and a sharp focus on equity and excellence.

ACADEMIC EXPERIENCE

You'll enjoy the personal attention and collegiality of a small school at Warner. You'll come to know your classmates and professors well and have the opportunity to be a part of the many impacting projects faculty are directing to improve schools and the community and to better understand our world and the human condition. At the same time, you'll have access to the many resources of a first-rate research university, including a world-class library, a large and diverse graduate student community, and world-renowned scholars across the disciplines.

The Warner School academic experience will challenge you and support you to:

- Champion equity and inclusion.
- Use evidence to make decisions and solve problems.
- Collaborate across disciplines and organizations.
- Think boldly and relentlessly to pursue excellence.

COMMITMENT TO RESEARCH

As part of the University of Rochester, a top-ranked research university, a key component of the Warner School is a commitment to research. Research focuses on counseling, human development and education in K12 and higher education settings. As a student, you'll have exposure to that research that is improving practice and knowledge.

For faculty and students alike, research is one of the powerful tools used to improve practice, whether it be on the front-line as counselors, administrators or teachers, or at the level of policy reform or curriculum development.
